Ecology, Environment and Land Ethics: An Essay: Discussions on Aldo Leopold's Sand County Almanac Staudt Shannon

How does our relationship with land and animals in our environment affect us? Do our selfish actions and motivations concerning the usage of land and non-renewable resources bring about a spiritual sickness, mental disease and physical ills to our human population? How interconnected are we as part of the life cycle, to the land, the birds, the insects and the doe in the field? Do we simply domineer over all, or are we quickening towards a black hole of transcendent and environmental demise?

“A Sand County Almanac: And Sketches Here and There” is a selection of non-fiction stories written in 1949 by American ecologist, forester, and environmentalist Aldo Leopold. It describes in detail the land surrounding his home on Wisconsin. The collection of essays advocate the authors ideas of land ethics and responsibility people hold for caring for the land and animals in the surrounding habitat. The book is considered a cornerstone in the American conservation movement. This paper researches his ideas and motivation, and brings in to account my own understanding and application of the material.

This is a 31 page, collegiate level, peer reviewed essay meant to be used as supplemental reading for students or others interesting in the subject. I am new to publishing work, so if you have a chance, please leave a review so that I know how to improve my work. Thank you so much.
