In Re-Making Love, Second chances are the stuff of dreams. Nearly everyone has at least one relationship they wish they might have had another chance to save, another opportunity to make right. We have all suffered the loss that a missed opportunity or a miscommunication has cost us.

In Passage, Lynn was tired of working in the garden, outside of her late grandmother's house, and she was about to get some tea when she had a chance encounter with fate instead. His name was Tom, or Tomas, and though he had the perfect smile and tailored suit, he was the worst vacuum salesman in the world. He didn't even know that it had to be plugged in to turn it on.

In When the Shivers Run Down Your Spine, Kate Plain is just that- plain. She blends into her surroundings and observes. Painfully shy and unaware of any of her potential charms, she just goes to work every day, does her time there, quietly and efficiently and then comes home. At night she puts on fuzzy pajamas, gets a warm cup of coco and then writes lurid stories that are published under an alias. Even the picture on the cover of these books are not of her- they are pictures of her sister Elyse.

In When the Wind Howls in New Directions, Susan Cabot opens her eyes in the hospital. She has practically no memory of what happened to her and Colton Pidcock in that hotel room, where they must have been attacked by her best friend Kate. But Susan still can't believe it, though she struggles to remember the tragedy, she can't get out of her head one particular detail. The scent. The scent that seems surprisingly familiar.

In The Bride Price, it was almost a perfect wedding. Almost. Judith Price, noted puzzle designer, had finally found the love of her life. Daniel Danvers, quiet and reserved, had finally popped the question, and the arrangements were all but completed, when everything fell apart. Her father, Alistair Price, the noted author and literary critic had been killed, his body found slumped over his writing desk, a letter opener used to end him.

Local sheriff Alan Voorhees has set his sights on Danvers as the prime suspect. But Judith is certain that Daniel could never do such a thing, and now she is in a race with the law. Sheriff Vorhees will arrest Daniel on Monday, but Judith must solve the mystery of her father's death, and identify his killer in the next two days.

In Price of Freedom, a boating enthusiast is dead, an apparent victim of poisoning. But is it a case of accidental ingestion, or did someone set out to put an end to the town's preeminent sloop racer? The town's regatta is only days away. Can Judith bring her skills to bear, and the criminal to justice? There isn't much time.
