A period novel where Eleanor Hadley, better known as “Boots,” welcomes the “Branch Boys,” veterans from her Maryland home town, back from WW II. All of them have changed and many use alcohol to dull the pain from the devastation they’ve experienced. Boots falls in love with one of them, though he’s not the man she once thought she knew. When she claims she’s not ready for marriage, he leaves town and finds another playmate. Devastated, Boots elects to marry a wealthy, good-looking, lawyer and the two set off to see the world on the happiest of honeymoons. Or is it? Why is marriage so much less satisfying than Boots had expected? From the Greek Isles, where she has a dangerous fall, to Ethiopia, Kenya, and the Seychelles, Boots feels less and less at ease with her life choice. Who is the strange young mime who keeps turning up? Is he a danger to Boots? To her husband? To her life?
