Plymouth. It is an unsettled question whether the first church was that at Exeter, of which the celebrated John Wheelwright was pastor; or that at Hampton, of which the Rev. Stephen Bachiler was pastor. Both, doubtless, were formed in 1638 the latter in the fall of that year. Settlements had previously been begun at Dover and Portsmouth. In the former place a meeting house was erected as early as 1633, and William Leverich, a worthy and able Puritan minister, was engaged as a preacher; to him succeeded one Burdill, and then Hanserd Knollys, or Knowles both unworthy men, But a church was not formed in Dover till 1639, and no pastor was regularly settled till 1642. However it may be a question, whether Wheelwright of Exeter or Bachiler of Hampton, was first in the order of New-Hampshire pastors, it should be acknowledged that the oldest church now in existence in the State, is that of Hampton; the first settled church being dispersed on the removal of Wheelwright, about four years afterwards, to Wells, in Maine. The only towns in the Province in which ministers had been settled previous to 1670, a half century from the landing of the pilgrims, were Hampton, Exeter, and Dover. Of the seven that had been pastors in those towns, only two were then in office, viz. Samuel Dudley, of Exeter, and Seaborn Cotton, of Hampton. In 1671 a church was organized, and Rev. Joshua Moody settled the same day, the first minister of Portsmouth; though he had preached there since 1638, and occasional preaching had been enjoyed since 1640, The church organized was at Dunstable, under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, now the first church in Nashua, and a minister settled in 1685. Subsequently other towns, bordering on the sea-coast, as New-Castle, Newington, Stratham, Durham, Kingston, and Rye, had ministers. Thence very gradually settlements were made in the interior, and ministers (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and don't occur in the book.)
